DOCUMENTARY PROJECTS

Davison, Elizabeth and Kristan Cockerill – Co-Director, Editor – DocuAppalachia (2021) - In 2017 an untitled, silent 16mm film reel from the 1970s was discovered in storage in Boone, NC. The heavily spliced film, made by local photographer George Flowers, juxtaposes images of idyllic Appalachian landscapes with piles of trash, rusting vehicles, black smoke, dirty water and a pig. When Flowers made the film, he was clearly influenced by the psychedelic culture of the day as well as by views at that time about environmental conditions. The 1970s were a watershed moment in American environmental history. Partly because of images like those that George Flowers captured, the Federal government enacted sweeping environmental laws. Now, 50 years later, what might a Flowers-like film reflect? DocuAppalachia compares scenes from the Flowers film to those same scenes in the 21st century and reflects on what has changed and what has remained the same in the rural southern Appalachian mountains. Screened at BRAHM and other venues forthcoming spring 2022.

Davison, Elizabeth – Co-Director, Editor and Producer – Saving the Virginia Big Eared Bats (2019) - A multi-agency effort to save an endangered species of bats. In the high country of North Carolina, a planned highway widening project and an old mystery sets the stage for this short film about discovery and survival. Cone Estate Memorial Park: From Private Retreat to Public Pleasure Ground (2019)* Produced for the National Park Service - Blue Ridge Parkway: Moses H. Cone Memorial Park. Screened ongoing at the Moses H. Cone Memorial Park mini-theater.

A documentary short about a community in Lenoir, NC established from land a slave owner (Alfred Dula) bequeathed to his slave (Harriet) and their eight children. Dulatown embraces its history at a bi-annual reunion where in recent years both African-American and White Dula relatives come together around their shared history and genealogy to publicly acknowledging they share more than just a surname.
